COPYRIGHT. AUTHORS AND AUTHORSHIP.

A short time since a friend of mine, a gentleman connected with the press, being in town of his literary acquaintance, called on me, and, in the course of conversation, he expressed a desire to know the extent of the rights of authors, and the propriety of securing them by law. He said he had seen a notice in the papers, and was desirous to know more of the subject. I told him that the rights of authors were not secured by law in this country, and that it was the duty of the public to protect them. He said he was surprised to hear this, and asked me to explain the reasons. I told him that the reason was that the law was not made for the benefit of the authors, but for the benefit of the public. He said he was disappointed to hear this, and asked me to tell him what he could do to protect his rights. I told him that he could do nothing, and that he must rely on the public for protection. He said he was disappointed to hear this, and asked me to tell him what he could do to protect his rights. I told him that he could do nothing, and that he must rely on the public for protection.
